Construction permits A construction permit is required by the Oregon Construction Contractors Board for any structure built for a commercial purpose. Such permits are issued by the county building departments or the Oregon Construction Contractors Board for structures in unincorporated areas and the state Department of Geology and Mineral Industries for those in incorporated areas. A $25 fee must be paid in addition to the cost of the permit. References Category: Oregon laws," e-mailed to me from the Rajneesh Foundation. The Rajneesh Foundation, which "has operated since 2008," offers a 24/7 hotline: (844) 531-4086. It says it "provides awareness to followers about their rights," but it provides little more information. Its phone line is attached to a message that says: "This service is currently unavailable." I made several calls to its phone number, beginning in late August and through the end of October. The first call was about the conditions of the detention center's patients. The second call was about the two Oregon Republicans who made public their concerns about the conditions of the center's patients. The third call was about the reported conditions at the center. The fourth call was about a $20,000 settlement over a sexual assault that the Oregon Department of Human Services paid to a former patient at the center, which is housed in the county jail. That patient was allowed to leave the county, but the settlement was kept secret. The fifth call was about the condition of the patients.

The call was not returned. Two e-mails were made to the Rajneesh Foundation, each of which was ignored. After I began writing this article, I received another e-mail. "Our staff are on vacation until the end of the month," it said. The e-mail went on to say that the Rajneesh Foundation was in the process of transferring its operations to the "Rajneesh" organization in the U.K., but that this process had been delayed due to "obstacles." The Rajneesh Foundation has a website with more information, including the name of its CEO, Rudy Schouweiler, and the social security number and home address of its accountant, Suzanne "Ginnie" LaRonde. The accountants do not appear to be on 82157476af
